Prohibited conduct and procurement

The group prohibits offering, promising, giving, requesting, or accepting an improper advantage in connection with company business. Facilitation payments and concealed personal benefits are not permitted. These anti-corruption principles are approved by the Board and set out in a formal anti-corruption policy. The Chief Compliance Officer is responsible for anti-corruption activities.

The procurement controls require competition or documented justification, defined evaluation criteria, approval within delegated limits, and separation between request, supplier selection, receipt, and payment. Formal procurement procedures govern anti-corruption controls for purchases, consulting, and intermediaries.

A formal gifts and hospitality procedure requires employees to record permitted business courtesies in the gift and hospitality register when the applicable threshold is reached. Cash gifts and courtesies intended to influence a decision are prohibited. The policy is accessible to all personnel on the company intranet and published on the external company website.

Third-party integrity controls

Risk-based third-party due diligence is completed before appointing sales agents, consultants, intermediaries, and selected suppliers. The review considers ownership, reputation, public-official links, service need, capability, and payment terms.

Higher-risk relationships require enhanced review and approval by Compliance. Contracts include anti-corruption clauses and contractual remedies, audit and information rights, and accurate-invoice requirements for non-compliance.

Invoices must describe actual services and match the contract. Unusual payment destinations, vague deliverables, or unexplained commissions are escalated before payment or renewal.

Conflicts of interest

Employees must submit conflicts of interest declarations when personal, family, financial, or outside interests could affect their objectivity. Declarations are required on joining, throughout the contractual relationship, when circumstances change, and before relevant decisions.

The policy defines actual, potential, and apparent conflicts and applies to Directors, auditors, related parties, employees, and third parties. Conflict prevention and management are governed by the internal regulatory system, and the conflict policy is accessible to all personnel.

Managers send declared cases to Compliance for assessment. Agreed safeguards may include recusal, reassignment of approval authority, disposal of an interest, or ending an incompatible outside activity, including for potential conflicts.

The high-risk roles in procurement, sales, government interaction, and finance receive mandatory training on conflicts of interest and periodic declarations. The group obtains signed conflict-of-interest declarations from counterparties such as suppliers and professionals. Undeclared conflicts are escalated for investigation.

Training and monitoring

Employees in exposed roles complete periodic anti-corruption training using examples involving gifts, intermediaries, procurement, charitable contributions, and conflicts. Disciplinary measures apply to anti-corruption violations.

Compliance performs a formalized methodology for periodic corruption-risk assessment to identify and assess exposed activities. Monitoring of anti-corruption implementation tests selected controls and follows corrective actions.

Compliance monitors selected register entries, due-diligence files, contract terms, and higher-risk payments. Findings are discussed with the accountable business owner and corrective actions receive an owner and due date.

Periodic anti-corruption information flows go to the Board and control bodies. Internal Audit may independently assess the design and operation of these controls.