

Mission, values, and expected conduct

The group's mission is to deliver dependable industrial services while protecting people, communities, and resources. Its stated values are integrity, accountability, respect, safety, and practical collaboration.

The Board-approved Code of Conduct translates these values into expectations for honest records, fair dealing, respectful behavior, protection of company assets, confidentiality, and speaking up about concerns. It results from a multi-function drafting process involving People, Compliance, Legal, Operations, and Sustainability. The Board and Executive Committee participate in drafting and approving the Code.

The mission and values are available to all levels on the company website and intranet. Management awareness initiatives reinforce values and expected behaviors through leadership discussions, practical examples, and team decisions.

Communication, training, and oversight

New employees receive the Code during onboarding and complete an introductory session covering expected behavior, available advice, and reporting channels. Completion is recorded by the People function. The Code is available to all levels of the organization on the company intranet.

All employees receive recurring training using practical scenarios. Additional sessions are provided to managers and roles exposed to higher conduct risks. Formal provisions activate disciplinary measures for Code violations. Policy updates are communicated through team briefings and the company portal.

Policies and procedures incorporate the mission, Code of Conduct, inclusion, and anti-corruption. They are aligned with recognized professional reference standards and best practices.

Compliance and Internal Audit provide oversight through advice records, selected control reviews, audit work, and analysis of recurring concerns. Material gaps are assigned to a responsible executive for correction.

Disciplinary handling

Potential breaches are assessed through a structured disciplinary process. The structured internal process governs assessment of violations and resulting measures, separates fact finding from the employment decision, and gives the person concerned an opportunity to respond.

The baseline disciplinary rules follow applicable collective labour agreements. Disciplinary measures and contractual remedies apply to internal-control violations as well as breaches of the Code.

Responsibility for verifying Code and internal-regulation violations is formally assigned to People and Compliance. Serious cases involve more than one function in the verification. Outcomes consider evidence, intent, impact, and prior behavior.

Confirmed breaches may result in coaching, a formal warning, loss of duties, or termination, subject to local law. Decisions and supporting reasons are retained confidentially, and required corrective actions are tracked.
