

Available reporting channels

Workers and external parties can raise concerns through a secure online portal available from the public company website. This dedicated IT platform accepts written submissions and allows later communication through a confidential case code. Portal data is encrypted in transit and at rest. A separate encrypted intake tool provides a second confidential route. Data encryption protects the report throughout its management.

The offline channels include a dedicated telephone line, postal mail, and a request for an in-person meeting. These offline channels remain available when online channels are unavailable. Instructions explain what information is useful and how to follow a case.

The channels are independently administered by the Ethics Office, which is outside the operational management chain and is the formally identified internal function. The Ethics Review Panel is the internal collegial body formally entrusted with management of the speak-up process, with the Ethics Office acting as its independent secretariat. Reports involving that office are redirected to the Chair of the Audit and Control Committee.

Confidentiality and protection

Case information is restricted to authorized Ethics Office personnel and specialists needed for a fair review. The reporter's identity is not disclosed beyond that group unless required by law or expressly agreed with the reporter. Each authorized person provides signed confidentiality commitments before receiving case information. The procedure regulates access to the whistleblower's identity.

Named and anonymous reports are accepted where permitted. The group prohibits retaliation against anyone who raises a concern or assists a review in good faith, even when the concern is not substantiated.

Document and case-code anonymization removes names from working copies when identity is not needed. Original case records are held in strong-authentication protected electronic storage accessible only to authorized case-management personnel.

Possible retaliation is treated as a separate concern and escalated promptly. Supportive measures may be agreed with People, Legal, or management while preserving confidentiality and the rights of everyone involved.

Case handling and communication

The portal and telephone service support multilingual reporting. Reporters receive an acknowledgment and case reference; reports in multiple languages are accepted. The confidential channel supports protected dialogue and document exchange while preserving anonymity.

The Ethics Office assesses scope, conflicts, urgency, and investigation needs. Cases are assigned to appropriately independent reviewers. Checks are performed by a function without operational roles, and conclusions distinguish verified facts from unconfirmed allegations. The investigation is separate from any sanctions decision, which is made through the applicable People, Legal, or contractual process.

The procedure is published on the company website and explained during onboarding and recurring awareness sessions. It also appears on workplace displays and noticeboards, is shared with personnel and sent to contractual counterparties. Periodic speak-up instruction is integrated with Code of Conduct, anti-corruption, and safety training. Reporters receive suitable progress or closure information when legal and confidentiality duties allow it.
